It's all you now, or mostly, let's face it.

You were handed a tumultuous world to live in, bookended by 9-11 and COVID-19. The fact that we even got hit at all in 2001 is a matter of shameful government incompetence on the actionable intelligence front. That we took that event and twisted it into our own preposterous version of trying to make lemonade out of lemons in Iraq just further entrenched us in a bleary period of U.S. foreign policy.

In New Jersey, if you're a Democrat, you've seen a governor resign and two more recruited from Wall Street, whose vantage point in that world – to hear them tell it – supposedly gave them a keen understanding of the working class lives the rest of us lead. The Republicans gave us Bridgegate, which they want the rest of us to forget about.

In the following pages you will find an accounting of some the rising minds on the Garden State political scene. This list should be seen less as a 'power list proper' and more a guide to emerging talents, and some inspirational narratives, making their way in New Jersey politics. There are a great many of them – and many with great promise. If you were on the list last year, but aren't this year, don't fret – our aim with this publication is to highlight different talents and narratives, not simply rehash last year's list.

In light of what we've waded through in the public arena these last two decades, I would exhort you only to do better than what you received.

No one's saying you had anything to do with the train wreck you inherited, but now you have to step up and shovel out of the narcissist shambles you inherited, and you must find a way to do better.

The bar, frankly, is low.

Run with it.

It's your damn time.

You didn't contribute to the sins that should torment those in front of you, still plagued by nagging 19th century prejudices and intent on being photographed amid their decayed portents of power.

Go take what you deserve.

We need you to step up and be so much better than what we have been.

1. FABIANA PIERRE-LOUIS

Routinely downtrodden by its own lack of seriousness, entrenched corruption, the long shadow of New York City, the history of a racist governor who became the state's only U.S. president to have cut his teeth on politics here, and a jagged "tale of two cities" culture, New Jersey this year even in the middle of the COVID-19 crisis, finally had what could only be described as a majestic moment.

The Senate passage on August 27th of Fabiana Pierre-Louis to be an associate justice makes the 39-year old the first African-American woman to sit on the New Jersey State Supreme Court. The Senate voted 39-0 in favor of the nominee, and took pains to note the high quality of her candidacy as Pierre-Louis and her family waited in the wings, aligned with a rare story of grandeur for all of New Jersey – and a fairly beat-up country.

The impeccably credentialed judge's rapid professional ascent makes her the youngest Justice by far on the New Jersey Supreme Court, giving her an additional unique perspective and assuring her place at the top of this year's InsiderNJ Millennial List. It's a monumental and paradigm-shifting moment, not just for the judicial system, but for the entire younger generation, which will have a true peer for the first time on the Supreme Court. She could conceivably be a sitting Justice for decades, ruling on cases and issues that may not even yet be on the horizon.

The daughter of Haitian immigrants, born in New York, raised in Irvington, Pierre-Louis clerked for former Associate Justice John Wallace. She is a graduate of Rutgers-Camden and worked as an associate in Montgomery McCracken's White Collar and Government Investigations practice group. She then served for nine years in the United States Attorney's Office for the District of New Jersey as an Assistant U.S. Attorney and the Attorney-in-Charge of the Camden Branch Office, the first woman of color to hold that position in the history of the District.

Prior to serving as the Attorney-in-Charge of the Camden Office, Pierre-Louis also served as the Attorney-in-Charge of the Trenton Branch Office from November 2016 to December 2018 and was the first woman of color to hold that position as well. In addition to working in both Trenton and Camden, Pierre-Louis worked in the Newark Office in the General Crimes Unit and the Organized Crime and Gang Unit.

“It wasn’t until 1994 – 218 years since our state’s founding and 47 years after our current Constitution took effect – that Associate Justice James Coleman took his seat as the Court’s first Black jurist,” said Governor Phil Murphy, who nominated Pierre-Louis. “It took only 16 years, when Justice Wallace was removed, before the African American experience and perspective was again absent. Justice cannot be blind if those who sit on our highest and most powerful bench are not surrounded by colleagues who encompass the full range of the American experience, whether it be racially or generationally, or both.

“And, so, today, we are making a powerful statement of where and how these values guide us,” the governor added. “Fabiana brings with her a sharp legal mind and a perspective which will be greatly beneficial to the proceedings of our Supreme Court.”

2. MEGAN COYNE AND PEARL GABEL

The two women in charge of the state’s digital media team, along with Edwin Torres, have revolutionized the state’s use of social media, particularly with New Jersey’s official Twitter account this year, attracting national attention in the process. The @NJGov account (with the descriptor of ‘OFFICIAL Twitter of the Garden State – the Pizza and Bagel Capital of the World and greatest state in the nation. Central Jersey exists. Wear a mask.’) now boasts over 338,500 followers as of September 2020 and has sparked engagement in a way that few, if any, government social media accounts have in the past. They’ve captivated the audience with a Jersey edginess and assertiveness – most notably evidently, perhaps, in the response to when someone posited ‘Who let New Jersey have a Twitter’: ‘your mom’. While the Twitter account certainly is an homage to that Jersey attitude we all love, Coyne and Gabel have also tapped into something more fundamental yet powerful: creatively using social media platforms to get the attention of residents in a relatable way, and then effectively using those platforms to impart public information to a wider audience.

STRATEGIC COMMUNICATIONS

Your story is our strategy.

3. BRYCE ROBINS

Robins was elected to his first term on the Leonia Board of Education as a senior in high school. During his first term on BOE, Robins was also a student at George Washington University in Washington DC, and traveled home to Leonia every two weeks via Amtrak or bus to attend Board meetings – a four hour commute of approximately 500 miles round-trip. He even took a part-time job waiting tables to pay for commuting costs in order to serve on BOE. Among his initial campaign pledges was to increase student representation on the BOE – and now, two students sit in advisory roles on the board. Having served as the BOE President, Robins was elected to his second term in 2019. Drawing from his unique experience, he offers the following advice for his peers: “when you’re young, people see you as young first, not the position you’re in. They’ll say ‘that kid on the board’ but not ‘that board member’ – it’s something to overcome, that’s fine, if you just do what’s right.

4. BRITTANY O’NEILL

The Chief of Staff to Senator Mike Testa and Assemblymembers McLellan and Simonsen, O’Neill was at the heart of the operations during last year’s most-watched legislative race which resulted in the wipe-out of LD1’s Democratic incumbents by the Republican challengers. With all eyes on Testa, she remains critical in guiding the freshman Senator, who is seen in many circles as a potential candidate for higher office and the most promising GOP figure in the Legislature.

5. MICHAEL SULEIMAN

The young Atlantic County Democratic Organization chairman is in the spotlight with CD2 Rep. Van Drew's party switch from Democrat to Republican, and again with the CD2 Democratic primary earlier this year, presiding over the only open county convention. Atlantic County, and Suleiman, will remain critical heading into the final stretch of the CD2 race, one of the most-watched in the nation.

6. FELISHA REYES-MORTON

The youngest councilmember in the City of Camden, Reyes-Morton overcame a traumatic childhood and has made it a priority to apply the lessons she learned, and the skills she's honed, to her leadership on the Council. In an interview with the Philadelphia Inquirer in early 2020, Morton Reyes said she sees local government opportunities as 'ways to avoid future generations — and my own children — from having to mature before time because of their circumstances'.

7. ZACHARY DOUGHERTY

Described by a neighbor last year as the 'living example' of President John F. Kennedy's 'ask not what your country can do for you, ask what you can do for your country', Dougherty is a Monmouth University student who has maintained an active presence on the state level for gun control legislation — Governor Murphy signed legislation into law last year of which Dougherty was a key advocate — and in his hometown of Toms River on behalf of his fellow students. Advocating for schools repairs and upgrades in 2019, Dougherty said, 'as a senior I could easily leave it to the next generation and close the door behind me. I owe everything to the school district that helped me be the best I can be'.

8. TONY PERRY

Having cut his teeth serving as Chief of Staff to former Republican Senator Joe Kryillos, Perry is now serving his second year as Mayor of Middletown – home of Governor Murphy – in Monmouth County. The rising Republican star continues to impress observers with his leadership skills.

9. SARAH NEIBART

An active presence in Republican circles and confidante of former LG Guadagno, Neibart ascended to the mayoralty of Mendham Township, becoming the youngest female Republican mayor in the state. She's a clarion young conservative voice who founded the Fair Property Taxes For All New Jersey' group.

10. ANTWAN MCLELLAN

After serving on the Ocean City Board of Education, and two terms as an Ocean City Councilman, the freshman Republican Assemblyman was elected in 2019 alongside Senator Testa in 2019's much-watched and contentious LD1 battle, becoming the second African-American Republican lawmaker in the Legislature's history.

11. WILL CUNNINGHAM

Overcoming homelessness to attend Brown University and work for the House Oversight Committee, the openly gay former CD2 Democratic primary candidate received accolades for a strong and moving debate performance calling for action on social justice and criminal justice reform, using his personal experiences to illustrate the importance of the issues. During the campaign, the Philadelphia Inquirer noted that 'his is a generation whose time has come'. Cunningham's former campaign staff recently have launched a nationwide progressive PAC.

12. TOMMY RUSSO

An attorney specializing in workers compensation law, Russo was elected to the Howell council in 2018, and started a first-of-its-kind internship program for high school students to gain first-hand experience with the workings of local government.

13. JESSE O. KURTZ

The youngest councilman in Atlantic City – and its lone Republican, since the defeat of Mayor Don Guardian in 2017 – won re-election earlier this year in a nail-biter race.

14. CRISTINA PINZON

The Stateside Affairs founder has become a major player among young New Jersey politicians and serves as a bridge between the state's political players and the Latino community.

15. BRANDON MCKOY

The President of New Jersey Policy Perspective, McKoy and his team – among them, Communications Director Louis DiPaolo – offer rapid-pace analysis on key policy issues facing the state, and are widely read and relied-upon by the Governor's Office and Legislature.

16. VIN GOPAL

The Monmouth County star, the youngest member of the state Senate, is a relevant force in the Statehouse and has surrounded himself with a team of young talent, among them: Dyese Davis, Aislinn Brennan, Toni Gingerelli, Joe Libutti, Kin Badger, and Matt Anderson.

17. A'DORIAN MURRAY-THOMAS

The founder of SHE WINS, a leadership organization for young girls in Newark, Thomas – who lost a parent to homicide – was elected at age 23 to the Newark Board of Education last year, becoming the youngest female elected to the board in its history.

18. SABEEN MASIH

The Capital Impact Group vice president, and founder of the Asian Americans of Trenton Networking Group, has emerged as a critical young voice over the past year, specifically with her role as a member of Senator Loretta Weinberg's Workgroup on Sexual Harassment, Assault, and Misogyny in New Jersey Politics.

19. JOHN FRANCIS ROMAN

First elected in 2017, stemming from his off-the-line primary victory, Roman has proven himself to be a street-smart campaigner and ward advocate who doesn't shy away from speaking out on local issues. He's a key local ally of Union County Democratic Chairman and Senator Nick Scutari.

20. NABILA BAPTISTE

The Deputy Director of the New Jersey Democratic State Committee has impressed observers with her work ethic and talent – and was recently named the manager for Democratic presidential candidate Joe Biden's campaign in New Jersey.

21. RYAN PETERS

The Burlington County lawmaker, a Navy Seal, has been among the most vocal Republicans in the Assembly, and survived a strong Democratic challenge in 2019, placing him – along with LD1 Senator Testa – among the bright prospects for the NJGOP's future.

22. MUSSAB ALI AND ABEERA SAEED

Saeed and Ali co-founded the Ali Leadership Institute, a mentoring program that aims to promote civics understanding and train the next generation of leaders. Ali is the youngest Muslim elected official in the nation, serving on the Jersey City Board of Education, and is attending Harvard Law School. Saeed is a Yale University student and Jersey City native who helped manage Ali's winning campaign.

23. VICTORIA NAPOLITANO

The Moorestown GOP Councilwoman served as Mayor (the youngest woman ever) and recently became a mother, and has made it a point to bring her young daughter to council meetings, telling SunNewspapers that 'I hope that serves as an example that young women can step up to take leadership positions and be involved in things like this'; after 8 years in office, she opted against seeking re-election this year.

24. AXEL OWEN

Having previously helmed LD11 Senator Vin Gopal's winning 2017 campaign, Owen is managing the NJ CAN 2020 ballot referendum passage effort, putting him at ground-zero of one of the most important issues for young people: the legalization of marijuana.

25. BILL MOEN

Having served as Camden County Freeholder and Senator Cory Booker's South Jersey State Director, Moen ascended to the Assembly last year following the retirement of Assemblywoman Egan Jones. He's the prime sponsor of legislation to establish 'baby bonds', which has become a priority proposal of Governor Murphy's recently.

26. ANTHONY FASANO

First elected to office at the age of 19 to the Hopatcong Board of Education, Republican Fasano was elected in 2019 to the Sussex County Freeholder Board, making him one of the youngest freeholders in the state.

27. SCOTT SALMON

The former CD7 Democratic primary candidate is establishing himself as a go-to elections lawyer, representing clients such as Rep. Malinowski and Paterson's Bill McKoy, who's locked in one of the most contentious VBM-related elections cases in the state.

28. BRIANNA VANNOZZI

An ace reporter in her early 30s, Vannozzi is a trusted and reliable journalist with the venerable NJTV, and just became the new anchor NJTV's Nightly News.
