By Max Pizarro

The Data Center Action Agenda Imperative

We've said it before, and we'll say it again. No one wants to shut down a project that benefits a union worker. But New Jersey urgently needs a deeper, more substantive and more convincing action plan regarding data centers and their impact on our citizens and the overall societal impacts of AI.

The legislature undertook hearings on artificial intelligence and routinely probed the intentions of data center drivers, but we require a comprehensive and authoritative executive agenda. We believe Governor Sherrill (who to her credit has already begun the conversation and put in place some protections) should lead a conference to pull all the people together, from labor unions to industry leaders, big and small tech, to environmentalists, to community activists, to local business owners, and elected officials at all levels, to scrutinize the impact – and not only environmentally. We must – with all expedition – consider the long-range implications of data centers on our population. We need actionable facts.

We don't want to hurt a single job.

But certainly, we do not want to create an environment where human labor gets crushed by an unregulated and rushed industry.

We don't want Hal the computer locking us in suspended animation, outside the pod bay door of our own cherished Garden State. The fact that Donald Trump and his big tech allies want to force feed as many data centers as possible without substantive community input and absent regulations should tell you everything you need to know about why we need to shine a much brighter and much more intense light on this subject.

We don't want Hal the computer locking us in suspended animation, outside the pod bay door of our own cherished Garden State. The fact that Donald Trump and his big tech allies want to force feed as many data centers as possible without substantive community input and absent regulations should tell you everything you need to know about why we need to shine a much brighter and much more intense light on this subject.

So, Governor Sherrill, once again, please take heed. Understand, in a cauldron of misinformation, where people otherwise draw their own conclusions, we need a very well organized, and very well-covered, public conference. Appreciating the work already done, safeguards to date put in place, we also recognize that significant unsettling questions persist about this industry and its impact on the environment, labor, and humanity.

And now, to the elections at hand...

We Still Have a Country, After All, America

To those who supported Donald Trump in 2024, we hope you've learned your lessons. Let me spell them out for you, in case you have chosen – as he has – to remain in a self-aggrandizing cocoon.

Lesson Number One.

The South really did lose the Civil War, guys. Trying to glob onto the carcass of a daft TV personality to take the country back to 1859 is stupid and self-defeating. Maybe it wasn't easy to accept defeat in 1865 but let it go. Ramrodding witless anarchy, tyranny and racism doesn't settle a score with the North. It just debilitates America. You might find it funny to have incompetent people like Kash Patel, Pam Bondi, Pete Hegseth, Linda McMahon, Kristi Noem and Bobby Kennedy Jr. running critical departments into the ground to short circuit the federal government. You might be amused by Trump advancing his own financial self-interest to the detriment of national security, as a statement of government's fundamental evil. But plenty of us out here know the advantage of the wise use of government and understand the civil and legal necessity of constitutional government for the public's general health and welfare.

Lesson Number Two.

Defending the uber wealthy and their insistent structure of slavery perfected in the antebellum South won't get you anywhere but dead. Just ask the guys in grey uniforms who stormed Gettysburg. Consider the fact that the South – on the backs of human slaves – represented the greatest concentration of wealth (in the world!) in the hands of the fewest. The musket carriers and cannon fodder died to perpetuate a fundamentally inhumane and barbaric social and economic system. Without equating southern slavery to the current condition of the country's working class, understand Trump's attempt to dramatically shift the greatest wealth from the middle class to the billionaire class and his rush to empower AI and you will get some sense of a new, modern era of shackling the greater share of humanity within their system.

You naively bought a line about affordability and the cost of goods thinking a fake businessman could get it done. Instead, you got a Russian oligarch picking up the tab for Trump Junior's wedding, a $400 million airplane bequeathed to Trump for the Qatari government, a president embossing the Oval Office in gold, trying to plaster his name on public buildings, scrapping the Kennedy Center, enabling and unhinging big tech, eradicating the Department of Education, assaulting justice, pardoning criminals loyal to his agenda, and demonstrating more interest in creating a ballroom for the rich than working to improve the lives of hard-working Americans. This is a guy who's never worked a day in his life who fundamentally believes in the investor class, not the working class. Get that through your heads.

Lesson Number Three.

Leading the greatest country in the world is not entertainment. It's serious business. Men and women who wear the uniform of the United States of America depend on wisdom in the chief executive and his advisers. You may find it hilarious to see a guy acting like a rabid buffoon in public, or a grown man in oversized sycophantic shoes purporting to serve as secretary of state. Maybe you laughed uproariously when Trump – in TV personality glory – told underlings, “You’re fired.” Maybe you laugh when he ridicules reporters and women. But simply know this: those who lead the finest among us – the young men and women of the military – need to be of exemplary moral character.

Lesson Number Four.

Remember the words of the Greek philosopher Heraclitus: “Character is fate.” Don’t forget that. We can debate this or that system, and argue the merits or demerits of Plato’s conclusion, namely that democracy leads to oligarchy. But you can’t buck Heraclitus. “Character is fate.” It was true in the ancient world, and it is true now. No Babylon can supplant that essential human truth in the life of man. Newfangled Nebuchadnezzars dragging the Epstein Files merely defecate upon the grace, dignity and moral imperative of this country, at its heart a product of the Enlightenment. Not everyone is a philosopher, but don’t ever again think reducing the country to the size of Sardanapalus’ death chamber will get us anywhere but at odds with America itself.

*Credibility.
Trustworthiness.
Influence.*

Lesson Number Five.

We can have a debate about the separation of church and state. But don't ever again frontend load Jabba the Hutt as the public square spokesman for "Christendom." Give to Caesar what is Caesar – ok, fine. But that doesn't mean we want Caligula as President. Even worse, we don't want Caligula pretending to be guardian of the faith. You've put yourself in a pretzel here with this guy. Just don't do it again.

Lesson Number Six.

Trump lost the 2020 election. It doesn't matter how many Kool-Aid drinkers or toadies deny it or bootlick to try to advance their careers, or how many public servants they threaten or try to strongarm. Trump lost. Joe Biden beat him. Here are the numbers: Biden, 51.3% (81,283,501) (306 electoral votes). Trump, 46.8% (74,223,975) (232 electoral votes). You can storm the Capitol in minotaur headdresses, create conditions resulting in the death of a police officer from New Jersey, try to bigfoot Georgia's Secretary of State, fail to participate in the peaceful transfer of power, summon judicial candidates who the deny the results of the election, whine, and whine, and whine, but you cannot change the truth.

Lesson Number Seven.

Picking on society's weakest and most vulnerable never makes you a tough guy. It just shows you to be a true wimp, and the trudging tool of a little Lord Fauntleroy like Trump, never in a fistfight in his entire life. And a world class whiner. The next time there's a crisis and you want to address it, don't start by pardoning more than 1,500 election deniers so many of them can don masks to go after donut shop workers, gas station attendants, and forklift drivers. Remember what you come from, and where you come from, and summon the inner strength to target those powerful forces creating conditions antithetical to workers' rights, not the workers themselves.

Lesson Number Eight.

Eight takes us back to one. Don't forget the history of America. Now, you might be more inclined to watch reruns of "The Apprentice" before you ever pick up a history book. But don't forget the shifts of power, some of them wrenching and tragic – starting with the American Revolution and Washington's declaration of no more kings. Don't forget Lincoln preserving – not dividing – the union. Mark 3:25: "A house divided against itself cannot stand." Don't forget the bloody path to living up to our creed, that all men are created equal. Don't forget the trade unionists fighting for greater income equality. The wise expansion of government in the aftermath of the Great Depression. Don't forget the Greatest Generation who defeated fascism. Don't forget Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., John Lewis, Rosa Parks and the Civil Rights movement and the sacrifices of those dedicated to justice at the core of our country's primary documents.

Don't forget.

Never forget.

ELECTION 2026: SHERRILL VERSUS TRUMP

Elections represent a binary choice, and on Nov. 3rd, New Jerseyans have in front of them a clearcut decision. Imperfect, defined by two parties inadequately reflecting the diverse and complex will of man, our system nonetheless – in the words of Winston Churchill – represents “the worst form of government except all others.”

For all its deficits – and they are considerable – Democrats in battleground contests contain the clearest alternative to Trump and his hate-filled, cruel and corrupt agenda. Nowhere does the contrast strike more starkly than in New Jersey.

Democrats advanced a genuinely moral leader when they elected Mikie Sherrill last year, a public servant dedicated to transparency and decency in government.

Trump has made over a billion dollars in crypto investments, started a war with Iran he can't finish, sewn division and racism, empowered his most powerful corporate allies while targeting workers, attempted to end the long-needed Gateway Tunnel (a big creator of union jobs in New Jersey), weakened America's standing worldwide, made an enemy of the press and tried to subvert our election process.

Sherrill, by contrast, defended the Gateway Tunnel multiple times, defeating Trump in court to keep strong union jobs for New Jersey workers. A real leader, she assumed ownership of the (ongoing) Delaney Hall problem of Trump's making by refusing to allow masked agents of ICE to move on protesters. Unlike Trump, whose Attorneys general smother the truth to protect him from the contents of the Epstein Files, and whose FBI director refuses to investigate undue influence by tyrannical foreign governments over the Trump presidency, Sherrill announced independent investigations of both the DMV voter registration scandal (which occurred prior to her administration) and her own Lieutenant Governor following complaints by women who worked for him.

No cover up. No attempt to hoodwink anyone. No cronyism.

In both cases, DMV and Caldwell, the Governor sought nonpartisan representation to lead substantive inquiries into what went wrong. In the case of the DMV scandal, rather than pretend the nonexistence of a problem, the Governor took immediate action to correct the matter – and to ensure it does not happen again.

While Sherrill straightened out the DMV, Trump issued an executive order to invalidate voting by mail, which would disenfranchise veterans, the elderly, and the infirm. Mortified, county clerks from his own party opposed him. His own U.S. Supreme Court opposed him, sending him into yet another self-pitying rage.

As for the allegations leveled by women against Lt. Gov. Dale Caldwell, Sherrill took them seriously, while protecting due process.

Imagine that?

Due process.

The contrast with Trump could not be starker.

In a desperate effort to change the subject from their hopelessly corrupt president, Republicans want to convince voters that Sherrill is simply New Jersey's version of Trump.

It's sad. Truly. While Trump agonized over bone spurs in the Vietnam era, demeaned the late great Senator John McCain, runs partisan, taxpayer-funded ads from the Oval Office, and cries every time something doesn't go his way, Sherrill – a former U.S. Navy helicopter pilot with a decade of service behind her – presents New Jersey in – of all things – a dignified public service light. Think about her leadership when you go to vote. Think about her leadership of her party in a binary choice election.

Sometimes, you have to ask yourself if this really is New Jersey, the same place with a political establishment that looked the other way on Trump's Atlantic City financial improprieties as he – newsflash coming up – enriched himself and stiffed casino workers.

On Nov. 3rd, don't let that be the last word on the subject rendered by the people of the great Garden State.

THE TRUMPIFICATION OF AN OTHERWISE UNDEFINED KEAN

Tom Kean, Jr. started out in public life as a well-prepared and confident young man. Son of a former governor. Ivy League-educated. Mild-mannered. Undefined, but basically dignified. He was never going to run over anyone in a golf cart or do something to blatantly embarrass dad. He had a lot to live up to, of course, as he probably heard – and heard – given the iconic status New Jerseyans reserve for his father.

While he struggled to delineate himself publicly, he had his father's name to fall back on in a pinch, or frequently, in fact, even as a vulgar specter – like something out of a 1960s horror movie – blanketed the GOP in the form of Donald Trump and the MAGA movement.

Riding years of goodwill, the Keans wouldn't have to worry about that.

Or – cough, cough - would they?

The 2006 election, it must be said, took a lot out of young Kean. So much rode on him as the public manifestation of the next generation. Unprepared to go up against a Hudson County street fighter like Bob Menendez, his father's son absorbed a shellacking at the hands of bulletproof vest Bob. Subsequent to that statewide loss, Kean became more cautious, less trusting, and to a certain extent, more publicly humble. Kind of. It was difficult to say whether Menendez humbled him or whether the whole business made Kean more resentful. But he never really got over it. Scenes in elevators with uncomfortable people from newspapers asking irritating questions. Brian Thompson sticking a microphone in his face and interrogating him on Iraq. Thompson was a bulldog. Menendez cronies cranking up the lawnmowers outside the county building when Kean tried to speak. Operatives running after him wielding "Trust Fund Baby" signs. Kean might have just felt ganged up on in the end, as his campaign imploded.

It was likely then that he began to justify a bubbled public existence. Define himself? He wouldn't have to. The name spoke for itself, and for him. It took a little while for Kean to lock in on simply submarining it around the press, but he got there eventually. As senate minority leader during the Chris Christie years, he didn't have much to say. Or he didn't have to say much. Whichever one applies. He did find himself at odds with the governor in 2013, surviving a post-election night attempt by Christie to relieve him of his leadership position in the GOP caucus. By the time he mounted another federal run in 2020, Kean had gone into full-blown cloak mode. Why, he and his handlers could rationalize, would he want to submit to another humiliation like the 2006 campaign?

And anyway, he had an establishment ace in the hole.

Incumbent U.S. Rep. Tom Malinowski (D-7) beat him the first time. Then the Democrats carved out a district for Kean in time for a 2022 rematch, with 20K more Republicans than Democrats. They liked the father, an Essex guy, after all, wanted to work with him, keep the family legacy afloat, and didn't dislike Junior. Who was Malinowski really, they asked? It was the Biden Midterm election. Kean complained about the price of bread and eggs in his ads, avoided the media, got run over by Malinowski in their lone debate, and comfortably won the contest by – surprise – 19K votes.

Kean figured he could coast in a pretty safe district. But between 2024 and 2026, Trump's comeback choked the atmosphere, and now it's the Trump midterm election and grocery costs – another shocking surprise! – are out of control.

If anyone ever found Kean's remoteness vaguely charming, they no longer had an appetite for an invisible and entitled congressman who had nothing substantial to say on issues like data centers, AI, the Gateway Tunnel, the proposed siting of an ICE detention facility in Roxbury, and the ubiquitous presence in our communities of masked men with guns purporting to be federal law enforcement officers.

Wrote InsiderNJ columnist Andrew Leven: "Kean, Jr.'s purposeful decision to campaign on the inane evinces a contempt for our intellect as voters that should make even Donald Trump blush." But Trump wasn't blushing, as the Bedminster golf course jockey turned president prepared to get very involved in the CD-7 election. If Kean had hardly tried to define himself beyond the family name and an establishment-fortified district, Trump – a sulfuric presence with an approval rating bottomed out in the twenties – had cash to spare for his young "Apprentice," the last of a New Jersey breed of politicians with family roots in the era of the American Revolution – guys who lasted for a few hundred years, and who – as it turned out – uniformly found it difficult to survive in the Trump era.

Kean's two slightly older peers – Rodney Frelinghuysen and Leonard Lance – both proved unable to withstand the 2018 midterm backlash against Trump. Rather than suffer a loss to rising Democratic Party star Mikie Sherrill, Frelinghuysen opted out of reelection. "I wish he wouldn't spend as much time tweeting," he fretted to InsiderNJ, referring to Trump, as he exited public life. Lance, for his part, infuriated Trump by trying to walk a political tightrope, and ended up losing that same year to Malinowski. Blasted clear of their saddles, Frelinghuysen and Lance left Kean alone to gallop across a dubious smoking field, foot hooked in the stirrup, dragging along behind his mount over bumpy terrain.

Trump was more than happy to help.

Once his respectful enabler in the redistricting sweepstakes, for New Jersey, after all, is like a family, the New Jersey State Democratic Committee earlier this month cited the millions of dollars deployed by two Epstein File headliners, Trump and Elon Musk, to support the incumbent Republican congressman.

A Trump super PAC directed approximately $3.3 million toward supporting Tom Kean Jr. in the midterms. The spending comes as Trump and the NJ GOP ramp up efforts to save Kean, “who continues to dodge press interviews and won’t stand up for his constituents.”

Meanwhile, Elon Musk’s PAC has once again begun pouring money into propping up Kean’s campaign. He spent roughly one million dollars on Tom Kean Jr. in 2024, and has contributed $90,000 to eight House races so far, including Tom Kean Jr. The people of NJ-7 want leaders who will earn their vote, not try to buy it.

“Donald Trump and Elon Musk want reliable yes-men in Congress to push their billionaire agenda that hurts everyday families — and they are trying to buy this seat to shore up one of their most loyal foot soldiers,” said Chairman LeRoy J. Jones of the New Jersey State Democratic Committee. “Sadly, this money dump is no surprise, given that Tom Kean Jr. votes with Donald Trump 100% of the time. The message is clear: in return for Tom Kean Jr.’s blind support for the MAGA agenda that hurts

New Jersey, Trump and Musk are returning the favor with millions in dark money spending meant to influence our elections.”

In CD-7, where Kean’s handlers affix an exclamation point after every smiley-faced appearance by the congressman on his Facebook page, Kean — ever substantively absent, ever uncomfortably silent — had become a willing Trump passenger in the Mayflower descendent MAGA movement, cruelly perhaps, but very publicly, defined by a name.

CD-7 COLLISION COURSE: KEAN VERSUS BENNETT

In 2022, when he picked off Tom Malinowski, Tom Kean, Jr. campaigned on affordability and transparency. Four years later, he failed to deliver on both fronts, so his campaign must now frantically attempt to kick dirt on Democratic challenger Rebecca Bennett, another honorable United States Navy veteran.

This is a tough sell for Kean, who has to run around smiling vacantly while his TV ads lay on heavy bazooka fire. A guy with a government job sitting atop a mountain of stock trades faces Bennett, a helicopter pilot with a history of working in the hardnosed private sector.

Maybe the most protected incumbent in the country, Kean has tried to define Bennett as press-averse to reverse his own most obvious negative. It's laughable, of course.

But Bennett isn't laughing.

Earlier this month, she noted:

Tom Kean Jr. quietly released a new Periodic Transaction Report. What did it show? Six new stock trades in July — even cashing in on Google and Stryker, while he sits on the House Energy and Commerce Committee. And despite Congressman Kean's best efforts to tell us otherwise, his signature is still on the bottom of the document and he has not fulfilled his campaign promise to place his assets into a blind trust.

"Tom Kean Jr. promised us four years ago that if elected, he would ban congressional stock trading and move all of his assets into a blind trust. Instead, he has become one of the most prolific stock traders while voting to take healthcare away from New Jerseyans and drive up costs for all of us. My husband and I divested all of our individual stocks already because I want New Jerseyans to know exactly who I fight for," said Bennett.

More bad news for the incumbent Republican, via Save My Care:

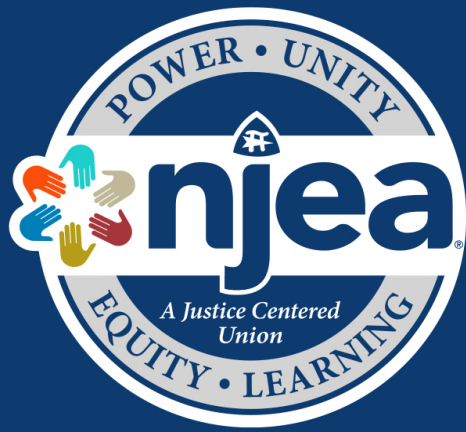

A new national YouGov/CBS poll found a staggering 40 percent of voters say the Trump-GOP Big Ugly Bill passed last year has "hurt" them or their family, while 21 percent say they've seen no benefit at all. The survey comes as NBC News reports that insurance costs are poised to spike again next year for most Americans after Trump and Republicans like Tom Kean Jr. (R-NJ-7) robbed $1 trillion from Medicaid and the Affordable Care Act (ACA) to pay for tax breaks for billionaires and big corporations.

"So many families are worse off than they were before Trump-Kean Big Ugly Bill dug its claws into the economy. Since Republicans ripped away tax credits from working families, millions have seen their monthly premiums jump by hundreds, if not thousands, of dollars — and millions have been forced to drop coverage altogether," said Brad Woodhouse, president of Save My Care. "Gas, food and housing are all more expensive than the year before, and we already know health premiums will be even worse next year. Trump and his accomplices in Congress like Tom Kean hatched a raw deal: a full-blown affordability crisis for working people in exchange for more tax breaks for billionaires and big corporations. It's no mystery why so many voters see the Big Ugly law as a punch in the gut, and why Rep. Kean desperately wants families to forget who brought the pain."

That thorny fact hardly helps Kean as Bennett (47%) leads the Republican incumbent (42%) among likely voters, according to an InsiderNJ StimSight poll. Bennett gets a net positive rating from 7th District voters — 40% favorable and 30% unfavorable — although 3 in 10 have no opinion of the first-time candidate. This contrasts sharply with voter views of the incumbent Kean, which stand at a negative 37% favorable and 55% unfavorable, with just 8% having no opinion.

The most important issue factors for voters are Social Security and Medicare (31%), illegal immigration (31%), grocery and goods affordability (28%), healthcare costs (25%), threats to democracy (25%) and standing up to President Trump (25%), and lowering taxes (22%) [note: voters could name up to 3 issues]. However, these issues are emphasized differently among the all-important soft voters. Social Security, healthcare costs, Trump and democracy are top factors for soft Bennett supporters. She has a clear advantage on handling these issues among all voters who consider them the most important factors in their vote. Among soft Kean supporters, illegal immigration and lowering taxes are top issues, and the incumbent has a decided edge there.

Making groceries and other goods more affordable is the one common issue that rises to the top for both soft Bennett and soft Kean supporters. Among voters who say this issue is an important factor in their vote, 39% see Bennett as being more likely to bring these costs down while just 17% give Kean the edge. Another 17% say neither candidate will improve the affordability of groceries and other goods and 25% say they are not sure which candidate would be able to do this.

“There are issues that drive out the base. For Democrats, it’s Trump and the safety net; for Republicans, it’s immigration and taxes. Both candidates have these voters virtually locked up. Then there is a small but crucial bloc that worries about paying their everyday bills. These voters are not locked in for either candidate but they are giving Bennett the edge right now,” said Patrick Murray of StimSight Research, who conducted the poll for Insider NJ.

Pumped with cash from Trump and Elon Musk, Kean ($4.9 million at the end of June, with $3.6 million COH, compared to Bennett’s $4.2 total receipts, with $1.4 million in the bank after a contested primary at the end of June) wants voters to believe that Bennett has her own party baggage. Specifically, one of his tweets cited CD-12 Democratic candidate Adam Hamawy as Bennett’s “running mate.” The Democratic nominee for the seat currently occupied by U.S. Rep. Bonnie Watson Coleman, medical Doctor Hamawy ran to the left in the 2026 primary and has a questionable association with the Blind Shiekh. He also has an honorable service record – and, unfortunately for Kean – nothing to do with Bennett.

No one's ever come close to picking off Jeff Van Drew, a former Democrat turned beet-red MAGA movement mountebank, at least by the reckoning of his former party members, still steamed that he jilted them for, of all people, Donald Trump.

And how.

Van Drew not only changed party pajamas.

He became Trump's 2024 state director, and the President's most persistent Garden State ally.

There's not an issue the GOP wants to ramrod that Van Drew doesn't jump on feet first. Take registered to vote in New Jersey, with almost 400 later casting votes.

“The part that should make every person in New Jersey angry is that the state knew there was a problem in June of 2024 and did not tell the public what happened until two years later,” Van Drew complained. “How do thousands of noncitizens get registered, hundreds vote, and nobody thinks the people of New Jersey deserve to know? Now we are asking questions to find out exactly what went wrong, and we have been met with resistance from the state every step of the way. That is why I chaired this hearing today. Elections can come down to one vote, so yes, we are going to keep asking questions to make sure that it is only Americans voting in American elections.”

Speaking of elections, Van Drew’s got one, against Cape May Mayor Zack Mullock, a moderate Democrat whose ads feature him driving forklifts, wearing hard hats, tossing the pigskin, and generally looking like a South Jersey diehard equally adept behind the wheel of a seafaring vessel as a four-wheel truck.

In other words, Mullock knows the public down there – which reddened in the Trump era, as everywhere else in New Jersey turned bluer – basically sees Democrats as wimpy and dorky and well, he’s tough, for the love of God.

Is it enough?

If it’s a heavy lift, Democrats at least want to furnish Mullock ($120K COH after a late race entrance and acrimonious primary) with late-in-the-game resources. If he can’t truss Van Drew ($1.5 million COH at the end of June), maybe he can tie up Republican assets and divert some attention away from CD-7.

Or maybe MAGA – beset by high gas prices, Epstein agony and grocery price hell – is ready to give Van Drew the heave-ho. Or if not, maybe they’re prepared to sit on their hands as Dems in the district turn out. It’s anyone’s guess, but Van Drew’s long-seething enemies at least see Mullock as credible and – given Trump’s toxicity – don’t discount the possibility of a blue tsunami, even in CD-2.
